

ABSTRACT

A mounting plate that is secured between a substrate and a component is used to mount a heat sink. The plate includes holes to accommodate the leads of the component and mounting flanges that partially surround the component and are used to mount the heat sink. In the 5 mounted position, the heat sink is held in thermal communication with the component directly or through a thermally conductive material.